

YES ON PROP 59

“Shall California’s elected officials use
all of their constitutional authority... to overturn Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission ...to allow the full regulation or limitation of campaign
contributions and spending ... and to make clear that corporations should not have the same rights as human beings?”

Newspapers across CA agree: Vote Yes on Prop 59

Bakersfield Californian

Vote YES on Prop. 59; stem election money flow
The Citizens United decision, which in part classifies corporations as “citizens,” giving them the ability to contribute to political campaigns, is credited with pouring special interest money into campaigns. Clearly this buying of America is a bad thing.

SACRAMENTO BEE

Take a stand on Citizens United

The path to constitutional change and to fix our broken campaign finance system will be long and difficult. Passing Prop. 59 is only one step, but possibly an important one.

San Francisco Chronicle

Chronicle recommends: Yes on state Prop. 59

The one clear path to restoring control of money in politics would be a constitutional amendment that would assert Americans’ right to regulate donations and spending. It’s a tall order and would require a formidable citizen uprising to demand it. Prop. 59 would affirm this state’s commitment to genuine campaign finance reform. Vote yes.

San Jose Mercury News

Vote yes on Prop 59 to fight Citizens United ruling

If you think California should take a stand on the Supreme Court’s outrageous Citizens United ruling, Proposition 59 is for you.... After Watergate and before 2010 ruling, organizations from mega-corporations to big unions were limited amounts they could spend to support or oppose candidates. The 5-4 Supreme decision removes spending limits on political ads. Corporations have spent more than $1 billion this year alone on campaigns.
